

CAPTAIN WILTSE'S FUNERAL.

Will Be Buried on Saturday with Full Naval Honors.

Officers Were Grief Stricken by His Sudden Death Yesterday.

CAPT. GILBERT C. WILTSE, U. S. N.

The funeral of Capt. Wiltse will take place at St. Thomas's Church, Saturday, at 11 A. M., and the interment will be in the cemetery. The funeral will be with full naval honors, and probably the commanders of most of the vessels here will attend.

The cause of his death was cerebral hemorrhage, which is supposed to have been indirectly caused by his attendance at the recent given at the Hotel Waldorf on Saturday. He was taken sick very shortly after he returned to his residence, at 42 East Fifty-third street, and died yesterday afternoon.

Capt. Wiltse's term of sea service expired four months ago, and since he was relieved of command of the Boston he has been under waiting orders. He had been in the navy thirty-eight years.

He was born in Binghamton, N. Y., in 1858. During the war he took part in the engagements between the Congress and Cumberland, and the rebel ram Merrimack, and in May in the engagements at Sewell's Point. He was made Lieutenant on April 19, 1881, Lieutenant Commander in March, 1885, Commander on Nov. 8, 1893, and Captain on Jan. 26, 1897. He was married twenty-one years ago to Miss Sarah Steele, who was then the belle of Washington. His widow and four children survive him.

SOMETHING WRONG.

His Order Sounded Queer, but He So Read It.

He seemed to be all right when he sat down at the table and the waiter bustled around getting him in shape for his dinner while he studied the bill of fare. He was rather uneasy, possibly, but as he had not eaten anything for eighteen hours that was not surprising, says the Detroit Free Press.

"Well, sir, what will you have?" asked the waiter.

"Tuck murtle soup and cold bodden," he replied, holding up the bill.

The waiter was disturbed.

"Tuck murtle soup and cold bodden," he repeated, and the waiter scolded and went out.

He came back in a few minutes with the order and the guest took up the bill again.

"Tuck murtle soup and cold bodden," he said, and the waiter came back with the order and the guest took up the bill again.

"Tuck murtle soup and cold bodden," he said, and the waiter came back with the order and the guest took up the bill again.

MUSCULAR JUSTICE.

A Recent Incident in Kansas Matched by One from Ohio.

"I remember an incident," says a writer in the Yankee Magazine, "that clearly illustrates Gen. Grant's character. When I was Secretary of the Navy some hundreds of the sailors of the better class came to me and asked to have some rank given them. They did not care about an increase of pay, they said, but they wanted relative rank. I could not do anything for them, but they came several times and were rather importunate, and I finally led a delegation of them over to the White House and let them present the petition to Gen. Grant in person.

"They told him what they wanted and argued for a redress of their grievances, plainly but forcibly. At last an old boatman came to the front, and hitching up his trousers and turning his old head, said: 'Mr. President, I can put this matter so you can see it plain. Now, here I be a parent, in fact a father. My son is a midshipman. He outranks me, don't you observe? That is right, don't you see?'

"Indeed," said Grant, who appointed him.

"The Secretary here," the boatman said, and encouraged by the question he went on: 'It ain't right, don't you see, that I should be beneath him? Why, if I was to go on to his ship the boy I brought up to obedience would boss him out rather than I. I want to be a better grub, nice furniture and all that. I live in a nice, soft bed all the time.'

"Yes," the President said, "yes, the world is full of inequalities. I know of a case quite similar to yours."

"The old boatman gave another hitch to his lower leg."

"I know of an old fellow," said Gen. Grant, "who is a postmaster of a little town in Kentucky. He lives in a plain way in a small house, and is a nice old man, but he isn't much in rank. His son outranks him more than your son does. His son lives in Washington, in the biggest house there, and is surrounded by the finest of furniture, and eats and drinks anything he takes a notion to. He could remove his father from office in a minute if he wanted to, but he doesn't want to. And the old man—that's Jesse Grant, you know—doesn't seem to care about the inequality. He just goes along in the world."

"The old boatman looked down on the carpet and then up at the President with his toe, and his comrades all laughed at him joyously and slapped their thighs after he returned to his residence, at 42 East Fifty-third street, and died yesterday afternoon."

A Poor Miner Buries a Pauper and Strikes a Bonanza.

"A good turn will always turn up so that a man never gets the worst of it," said Frank Painter, of Como, Col., at the Leclerc Hotel to a St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"How do you suppose one of the best fellows that ever lived became a rich man?" he asked.

"You order a stein of beer and a fried egg," he said.

"You order a stein of beer and a fried egg," he said.

SOME MISQUOTATIONS.

Popular Sayings Which Are Not Used as the Authors Wrote Them.

A writer in London Truth expresses his surprise that one of the most familiar lines in Gray's "Elegy" is invariably misquoted. The common phrase is: "Kept on the even tenor of his way," but Gray wrote: "They kept the noiseless car of death." There are plenty of instances of common misquotations that are suggested.

For instance, not one person in a hundred could give correctly the text of Job 17, which reads: "There the wicked cease from troubling, and there the weary be at rest." In common usage "where" is substituted for "there" in both cases, and a common offense is to speak of somebody's departure to that bourne from which no traveler returns, under the impression that Shakespeare said something like that.

"The undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns"—a bourn being a boundary line, whence it came to mean a brink.

"But the tongue can no man tame: It is an unruly evil, full of dangerous to the ears," said Shakespeare. The vulgate translates the passage "Great is the truth and mighty above all things" in the book of Ecclesiastes that: "Magna est veritas et praevalet," but praevalere means to prevail, and it is veritas et praevalere, and they translate it accordingly. Numerous other just as striking instances could be given.

PARK BOARD'S NEW HEAD.

President Tappen Expected to Restore the Former Solemnity.

Denial of a Rumor that Dana Was "Turned Down."

The election of ex-Judge Abraham B. Tappen as President of the Park Board, in place of Paul Dana, will restore the old-time solemnity to the proceedings of that body.

Judge Tappen, who is one of the oldest inhabitants of the city, does not remember when there were such stirring times in the Park Board as during the Presidency of Dana.

The President of the Board is practically director of departmental affairs, but Dana's ideas of doing things did not always meet with the approval of the other Commissioners, and he was, in the parlance of the politicians, frequently "sat upon."

It would not have been a surprise had Dana resigned when he sustained defeat in his fight against the adoption of the plan for the new wing to the Museum of Natural History, but Dana showed that he was not of the thin-skinned kind.

The fact that the election took place in secret session, after Dana's right to his office had been questioned in open meeting a week ago, gave rise to a rumor that he had been "turned down" and forced to relinquish the Presidency.

The rumor is denied, with the statement that it is customary to elect a President every year, and Dana had served the allotted time in that capacity.

The President receives a salary of $5,000 a year. The other Commissioners get no more than $1,000 each.

Commissioner Straus was first chosen to his office, but he declined, as he intends to visit abroad in Europe for several months, and cannot attend to the duties of the position.

Commissioner Gray was elected Vice-President, a new office created by recent act of the Legislature. The duty of the Vice-President is to act in the absence of the President.

NO USE TO KICK.

Some Things We Have to Bear in Boarding-Places.

"There is one man in the world who must change his ways a great deal before he will be compelled to clean him up to some bosom and lavish affection upon him," said a gentleman to a Colorado Sun reporter in a Curtis street restaurant yesterday. "Reference is made to the polished and gentlemanly waiter whose duty it is to bring the smoking viands to you when you sit down to eat. He probably means well enough, but his mind wanders in devious paths."

"You order a stein of beer and a fried egg and a hot water bottle," he said.

"You order a stein of beer and a fried egg and a hot water bottle," he said.

"You order a stein of beer and a fried egg and a hot water bottle," he said.

CAUGHT BY A WORD.

The New Grocer Beaten in an Axe-Handle Deal.

Among the worthies that loathed about an Indiana town was one Jim Jones. He was one of those whittling geniuses who can make anything, from a top to a log-cabin, out of a chunk of wood, says the Waverley Magazine.

His credit and reputation were not over good, but the new grocery store had not learned these facts. So when Jim sided into the new store with a bundle of smooth looking axe-handles the proprietor was not long in closing a deal with him and settling in hard cash.

Shortly afterwards an old Hoosier dropped in to purchase a handle.

"Them be nice 'kockin' goods. What might the price be?"

"Those are extra fine hickory," said the young grocer. "You shall have to charge 50 cents apiece."

"Let's see one."

The farmer burst into a loud "haw-haw," as he balanced the stick upon his little finger and went out to tell how green the new grocer was in his deal.

Next day in the presence of a large crowd of corner loafers the grocery man tackled Jim Jones.

"You say you sold me these bass-wood handles for fraud?"

"Well, I guess not. I told you they were hickory, sure," said Jim coolly.

"You say you sold me these knot hickory?" retorted the overheated grocer.

"Eggsactly," drawled Jim. "I said they were hickory—no more air they."

Amid the haw-haws of the crowd the young grocer was forced to pass around the elder and swallow his loss and chagrin in the same gulp.

RAILROADS AND RAILROAD MEN.

All the roads running into this city are doing a big business in passenger traffic on account of the naval demonstration.

Five private cars were standing on sidetracks of the Pennsylvania's Jersey City depot yesterday, which indicated that there was quite an influx of out-of-town railroad officials. Three of the cars belonged to President Roberts, Vice-Presidents Thompson and McGraw, and the Pennsylvania, Calvin S. Bruce, of the Lehigh and Eastern, and Senator Leland Stanford, of the Central Pacific.

The initial trip of the World's Fair train over the West shore will be made to-morrow, and it will carry, exclusively, a party of railroad, hotel and newspaper men.

Max E. Staples, general agent of the Erie, has returned from his trip to Bermuda, much improved in health.

If a quorum can be obtained the Joint Committee of the Trunk Line and Central Traffic Associations will meet to-morrow in this city to consider the complaint of the Erie that the West Shore is violating the World's Fair agreement.

Frank Ellmaker, former superintendent of the Kensington Division, has been made superintendent of the Middle Division of the Pennsylvania.

A report comes from Philadelphia that the Pennsylvania intends to purchase the water front now leased by it at the foot of Cortlandt street.

The Pennsylvania is preparing to inaugurate a daily service of three round-trip trains between this city and Washington.

The World's Fair engine, E. H. Thomas, built by the Erie engineers, and named after the First Vice-President of that Company, has been sent to the big show.

Certainly Not.

Did it ever occur to you that in the very nature of things, lard is at best was an objectionable article of food?

It has been tolerated as a short-cut and for frying purposes, simply because there has been no economical substitute for it—until the introduction of Cottolene. This new shortening possesses none of the objectionable qualities of lard, but is a purely vegetable shortening, which not only takes the place of lard in pastry, but in frying and cooking it is preferable in every respect. The cook and the housewife who have given it one trial discard lard and use only Cottolene for cooking purposes.
